Eikenberry views latest training methods at DLIFLC

(DLIFLC)...Brian Lamar

Karl Eikenberry, retired Lt. Gen. and former U.S. Ambassador to Afghanistan, took a day to learn about advances in the realm of language learning at the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center Oct. 18. "You've got momentum here using great applications of technology and working well with troops in the field to get real-time feedback of how your languages programs are working," said Eikenberry, while speaking about the capabilities of the Institute.

The inductees for 2011 are: Major Jose Anzaldúa, USMC, Retired; Dr. Ray Clifford; Dr. Martha Herzog; Mr. Everette Jordan; Ms. Renee Meyer; and Mr. Robert Tharp.

Brown leads Ivies in gov't language scholarships

(The Brown Daily Herald)...Austin Cole

This past summer, Brown led the Ivy League in the number of students awarded prestigious Critical Language Scholarships, winning 11 of the 600 total awards. The scholarship, sponsored by the U.S. Government, provides students with the opportunity to immerse themselves for a summer in the study of one of 13 "critical" languages, including Arabic, Chinese and Urdu.

More Languages Likely to Arrive at Cornell in 2012

(The Cornell Daily Sun)...Sarah Meyers

Beginning in fall 2012, language instruction in Modern Greek, Dutch, Romanian and Tamil will likely be available to Cornell students through video conferencing classes with other universities, according to Richard Feldman '69, director of Cornell's Language Resource Center. Cornell is preparing a memorandum of understanding with Yale and Columbia that would allow students to take instruction in foreign languages through video conferencing, Feldman said. In exchange, Cornell might offer instruction in Sinhalese, Bengali, Indonesian and Vietnamese to peer institutions, he said.

Robot dragon teaches kids language skills, battles impulse to terrorize city

(Engadget)...Brian Heater

Did you have trouble learning language skills at a young age? It's probably because you didn't have the right teacher. And by "the right teacher," we mean the right robotic dragon, naturally. This cuddly little mythical beast is the joint creation of researchers at Northeastern University, MIT and Harvard -- some of whom were behind the decidedly creepier Nexi bot. It's part of a National Science Foundation-funded program to help young children learn language skills, suggesting that forming a bond with a teacher plays an important role in the educational process. The dragon will be brought to preschool classes to help test out this hypothesis. Hopefully a robotic knight will also be on-hand, just in case.

Foreign Language Budget Cuts Harm the National Interest

(Policymic)...John Deppe

I was asked to write a short piece on a foreign policy topic of my interest. As a recent Georgetown College Faculty of Language and Linguistics graduate who double majored in two modern languages, recent budget cuts wiping out the already relatively meager foreign language funding is an issue close to my heart. These cuts not only deeply sadden me, they also scare me.

Senior DOD Official Visits Indiana Training Center

(Defense.gov) ...Staff Sgt. Brad Staggs

The Pentagon's top personnel official traveled here Oct. 21 to observe how Defense Department civilians are trained before they deploy to Afghanistan. "I'm here to get to understand the training better than academically," said Clifford L. Stanley, undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, as he watched an exercise featuring State Department civilians being hustled into military vehicles while under enemy fire. Frank C. DiGiovanni, director of training readiness and strategy for the office of the deputy assistant secretary of defense for readiness, briefed Stanley was briefed about the training. And Julius Johnson, Afghanistan field training coordinator with the Foreign Service Institute, told Stanley about his experiences attending the second class in July 2009 and how it helped him. Claudia Munoz, a program transition specialist with the Ministry of Defense Advisors program, described the feedback she has been getting. "We are being told that the [training] vignettes are identical to what they went through once they got into country," Munoz said. "It really is very realistic and helps the trainees to hit the ground running."

Portage school district awarded $600,000 to teach Chinese language, culture

(Kalamazoo Gazette) ...Julie Mack

Portage Public Schools has received a $600,000 grant over five years to help subsidize the cost of teaching Chinese language and culture. The grant is from the Confucius Institute at Western Michigan University and will provide up to $30,000 for two Portage elementaries and the two main high schools for each of the next five years. The grant money is to pay for teaching materials, equipment, guest demonstrations and other supplies. In addition to the yearly $30,000, WMU will provide instructors in language and culture under the supervision of Portage teachers.

Parents Slam Remark about Art, Music, and Language Program Cuts in Schools

(Patch.com) ...Paul Squire

Parent Sarah Bowe said programs like the arts, music and foreign language should be "off the table" if the board needs to make cuts. Another parent said foreign languages are essential for children to learn in today's global and multicultural market, though she recognized it would not be east for the board to make cuts.

Demand Grows for Squad-level Linguist Program

(American Forces Press Service) ...Donna Miles

Last year, 74 soldiers at Fort Campbell, Ky., became the first to participate in a new program that provides short-term, intensive language and cultural training to deploying military members. The general purpose force program wasn't designed for professional linguists or interpreters, explained Sam Garzaniti, who manages it at the Defense Language Institute Foreign Language Center here. Rather, the program provides basic Dari or Pashto instruction, taught by native Afghan speakers, to help nonlinguists -- military police, medics, truck drivers and infantrymen, among them, -- operate more effectively on the ground in Afghanistan.

Perfecting His Irish on the Job

(New York Times)...Corey Kilgannon

THE jolly trash man was going about his route in the Rockaways, Queens, when he spied a woman in front of her house. "Cé hé bhfuil tú?" he greeted her. Naturally, the woman replied, "Tá mé go maith." "Ceart go leor," the trash man shot back. This exchange — roughly: "How are you?" "I'm fine." "Ah, grand!" — was in Irish, the Gaelic language that survives only in parts of Ireland — and to a lesser extent, along the garbage route of Ed Shevlin, 51. The route winds through the Belle Harbor section of the Rockaways, where conversations were once commonly conducted "as Gaeilge. In June, the Fulbright Commission for Summer Language Study awarded him a grant to study in Ireland — the only trash collector on a list heavy with doctoral candidates and university professors.

English learners far behind under English-only methods

(The Hechinger Report)...Sarah Garland

The end of the school day in Patty Sanchez's kindergarten class at Geddes Elementary School is not so different from other kindergarten classes around the state. Children gather on a rug as Sanchez holds up a storybook about a coyote and a turtle and reads out loud. What's different is that Sanchez is reading in Spanish. The scene highlights a continuing California debate: More than a decade after voters approved an initiative to limit bilingual education in public schools, the state is using a hodgepodge of programs. Meanwhile, critics contend, young students pay the price. Educators cannot agree on the best way to teach English to non-native speakers. Success is anecdotal. Studies appear to contradict each other. Meanwhile, the percentage of California English learners who are proficient in fourth-grade English has dropped on a national test.

Interpreters needed due to rise in immigrant workers

(Business Insurance)...Sheena Harrison

As the number of immigrant laborers grows nationwide, experts say interpreters are an increasing factor in helping injured employees get back on the job. Interpreter costs are a hot-button issue in states such as California, which has a large population of immigrant laborers. However, the matter is becoming more standard for handling workers compensation claims across the country, say risk consultants and interpreters who specialize in such cases.

Online language training now earns promotion points

(Army.mil)...C. Todd Lopez

Soldiers can now earn up to 16 promotion points for completing language instruction with the Headstart2 language training program. The Headstart2 software uses digitally animated characters involved in military scenarios to teach reading, writing, speaking and listening skills in any of 16 target languages. Soldiers must register for an Army Training Requirements and Resources System account, known as ATTRS, to earn points in any of those target languages. "It gives a Soldier, a Marine, an Airman, a Sailor or a civilian -- who doesn't have background in the language, a fairly decent understanding of the culture, a basic understanding of the sound and script, and what we would describe as survival-level language," said Col. Danial Pick, commandant of the Defense Language Institute.
